Mary Coleman, aged 62, has recovered $5,000 for breach of promise against John Clarkson, 80, at Joliet, Ill.

Victor Hamilton was stabbed and killed at Durant, Miss., Tuesday, by J. L. Almon, editor of the Durant Democrat.

A number of colored persons of both sexes have applied for matriculation at the Chicago University. There is to be no color regulation.

Albert Wirtman, 2, a Buffalo barber, has deserted his family and eloped with his wealthy grandmother, who is aged almost 70.

The Reading God Trust will be prosecuted at Chicago for conspiracy. The price of anthracite coal has already been raised five times.

The Grand Jury at Clinton, Tenn., has indicted a number of miner prisoners for rioting, as well as D. B. Monroe, the alleged leader, for murder.

The Mollenauer Sugar Refining Company, independent of the big Trust, is completing a large refinery, to cost $1,000,000, and having a capacity of 2,000 barrels of sugar.

Chairman Atkinson, of the Georgia Democratic executive committee, declares General Weaver does injustice to the people of the State in his declarations of their inhospitality.

A terrific wind and snow storm prevailed on Mt. Washington, N. H., Tuesday night, the wind reaching a velocity of 100 miles an hour. Trains can not get down the mountain on account of snow and ice.

A suit on behalf of Mrs. Grover Cleveland to dispossess Blacksmith Reoon, who occupies a building owned by her at Omaha, Neb., was decided in her favor, as he had agreed to give her an extension of time.

Isaac Lena Schmidt Tuesday, at Boletown, N. J., choked her son, aged 4, to death because his nose bled from a fall. She then strangled two sons of William Barber, a neighbor and informed the police.

In Council at St. Louis Tuesday night a resolution was introduced to impeach Mayor Mooney upon charges of drunkenness and generally improper conduct. Upon vote the resolution was defeated by a majority of one.

Hostilities between residents of Alton, N. H., and a gang of Italians employed in building the waterworks resulted in the killing of B. L. Perkins, 24, by a stray shot fired into the group by an Italian, who escaped.

Eighteen valuable hunting dogs were found dead after Saturday night's thunder storm, at the kennels of the Brooklyn Gun Club. The dogs were chained to a continuous steel rod which was struck by lightning, electrocuting them all.

Frank Cassell, an Italian, one of a gang of counterfeiters who have been flooding New York with counterfeit $2 bills, has been arrested with a number of the beguine bills in his possession. They were made in Paris and sold in this country.

Lotta, the actress, underwent a painful operation at the hands of her physician at New York. The opening of her season, which was to have taken place this week in Toronto, will be postponed until Nov. 7, at Boston. Her trouble is of a spinal nature, and is due to a fall.

The Sheriff's posse of 125 men in pursuit of the Roslyn (Wash.) bank robbers came upon four of them in a dense forest in Leavenworth Basin, 20 miles east of Roslyn Monday. A battle ensued and one of the desperadoes was wounded. The others escaped in the darkness. The meeting was a surprise to both pursued and pursuers.

THE PYRAMIDS.

Thousands of years before there were any dwellings on the sites since occupied by Jerusalem, Rome and Athens, at the very dawn of human history, when all the rest of the world was still wrapped in the thick gloom of prehistoric barbarism, a vast town of huge buildings rose not far from the present city, on the other side of the Nile, which was dotted with the boats of the ancient inhabitants. A forest of venerable date trees casts its shadows upon the black soil, beneath which lie buried the builders of this city of a world gone by, of which nothing remains but the vast cemeteries, their position marked by an avenue of monuments. The famous pyramids of Giza, opposite Cairo, on the borders of the desert, form the last of these necropolis.

Everyone is familiar with the appearance of these strange pyramids, these huge paradoxes of strictly geometrical form, so vast and so lofty that it was not until after fifty-eight centuries of development that the human race succeeded in erecting a building of greater height, while the loftiest pinnacle of the most aspiring Gothic belfry, however light and airy it be, did not soar higher than the point of the pyramid at Cheops before it was blunted by time. Nothing could be more confusing to the eye than the general appearance of these heaps of stones, in which no artistic conception plays the slightest part. The effects of perspective in these lines of mathematical regularity are most bizarre—huge bare triangles, the outlines shortened or lengthened, marked out like a diagram by the sun into flat bands of light and shade, the reflections in the sand of the four mighty angles varying according to the time of day. The sloping sides, which at a distance appear absolutely plain, are, when approached more nearly, discovered to be broken up into a series of projecting stones, like a huge staircase worn with age. It is somewhat difficult to judge at first sight of the size of the pyramid, and the best way to measure the height by climbing it! It is at a corner where the stages, which seem to have been made for a race of giants, are divided into smaller steps, either for the sake of mortals of lesser stature or by the action of time, that the ascent of Cheops is made. We start, pushed from behind by one Arab guide, and dragged from above by another, with our eyes fully occupied with the dangers of the climb. Completely exhausted, altogether out of breath, and with knees too stiff to move, we pause at last, feeling as if we had scaled all three pyramids at once. But looking around, we find we are scarcely one-third of the distance up, and see our fellow-climbers looking like scattered ant upon the huge triangular mass. It is not until the platform at the top is reached, and the lungs are filled with the pure air of the heights, that any real idea is obtained of the monument of Cheops.

And what does this huge edifice contain? We must go down again and find out.

The entrance, which was walled up, is at a considerable height from the ground, in one of the faces of the pyramid, and looks like the porch of a cave cut in the living rock. A dark, gloomy-looking door opens on to a low, narrow passage, with floors, walls, and ceiling all lined with granite, polished till it is like ice. An Arab guide, with a candle in his hand, hoists you on to his shoulders and plunges with you into the slippery corridor, which descends rapidly to a hole in the rock on a level with the soil, going up again at the same angle. This opening gives access to a bare room, in which is a square hole, once the resting-place of the mummy of one of the Pharaohs. The rest of the interior consists of two or three narrow passages, resembling cavities made in oak timber by the teredo, with two other chambers similar to that known as the King's, all faced with granite, without a moulding or ornament of any kind; airless inclosures, where no clink admits a ray of light or sunshine; huge masses of compact limestone wrapped in utter night and silence. Such is the strange monument to build up which Cheops caused mountains of stone to be removed by whole nations of people who perished at the task beneath the whips of the convict guards.—[Harper's Weekly.]

What's This?

There is a division among Republican orators about making the Force Bill an issue. The Sherman-McKinley people think as President Harrison didn't make it prominent in his letter of acceptance he does not want it to be talked about much for fear it might offend a few Republicans who faint at the word force.

Sherman says in an interview that the Force Bill is not an issue and the Governor quotes Sherman.

Governor Foraker was told his fellow statesmen did not regard the demand for a Force Bill as an issue in this campaign.

"They don't!" he said quickly. "Well, it is an issue, and they will think it is when they hear from me."

Cleanings.

All the germs of the fruit to be set next spring start in the strawberry plant the year before. The earlier the plant is set and the better care it gets the more fruit it will get. Do not neglect plants now, thinking you will make it up by extra care next spring. You won't do it then, for one thing, and if you did it would be too late to do any good.

A black cow's skin may hide the appearance of manure, but the "germs" and odors thereof get in their work all the same. Thus a white cow is safer if the owner has any pride about him.

The chaff from wheat is one of the best materials for use on the floor of the poultry house. Keep the chaff dry and under cover. It not only permits of easy cleaning of the house but acts as an absorbent and also serves as litter in which the hens may scratch for food.

Raise your own beef and patronize home butchers, instead of selling cattle cheap and buying beef dear.

It is better to give cattle fine salt, as licking a lump makes the tongue of the cow sore. Better have it fine; then leave it in convenient places in the pasture where the cows can have free access to it cured, of course.

Stock and Dairy Notes.

The sires should be full blood.

Don't let the hogs go back when the grass gets short.

A box of charcoal is a good thing to keep in a hog lot.

The next two months push the hogs as rapidly as possible.

Weed out the poor cows if you expect to make money dairying.

To have cattle that will mature early, pure bred sires are necessary.

The indications are that corn will be too high to feed hogs for a profit, if fed exclusively.

Remember that pure water, a good feeding floor and a good slop trough are a necessity for the best results in fattening hogs.

September and October are generally the best season for putting fat on hogs, and the hogs should be put on full feed as soon as possible.

If you want to raise pigs for July and August market—when the price is usually good—they should be farrowed late in the fall, and kept growing.

Corn alone is not as good for hogs as a ration of bran middlings and oil meal fed in connection with corn. It should be fed as a slop, but not allowed to sour.

The Omaha Stockman says: The thing for a self-respecting hog shut up in a bare lot to do, is to die of cholera right now and avoid the misery of the next three months and cholera at the end of it.

Senator Mills was taken ill at Corsicana, Tex., Tuesday. His physicians are relict but say his condition is not serious and is due to his recent attack of the grip and overwork campaigning. His son, who is at Dallas, has been requested to come at once.

Reed and the Force Bill.

Somehow Mr. T. B. Reed, better known as Czar Reed, Speaker of the Billion Dollar Congress, and projector of the revolution of 1890—Mr. Reed, we say, has managed to keep himself so quiet that one can almost hear him think.

It may be that Mr. Reed is not satisfied with the way Mr. Harrison is conducting his campaign. It certainly lacks the vigor and the aggressiveness which characterized Mr. Reed when Speaker of the House. There is a want of that confidence that overwhelming self-confidence, which made Mr. Reed's reign picturesque, if not delightful.

The ex-Speaker had an idea that the people of America were tired of a constitutional democracy, and wanted to substitute force for fairness.

Hence his dazzling career. He dared everything and defied everybody. He insisted that Congress was gathered to legislate, not to deliberate, and so he stifled all deliberation.

Then he appealed to the country, and found that all unconsciously he had precipitated a revolution.

Mr. Reed's favorite measure was the Force bill, and as he was himself the embodiment of sheer brute force, and as every day he gave a display of this quality, he expected to ride into the Presidency on a tidal wave of popularity.

But his great measure failed, and the gentleman from Maine discovered that force is no more successful than fraud in American politics.

But one characteristic distinguishes Mr. Reed which every American admires; that is pertinacity. When Mr. Reed enlists in a contest he rarely gives up. Mr. Harrison may dodge the Force Bill and Mr. Blaine may ignore it, but Mr. Reed makes Force his God, and would as soon disown his Creator.

Mr. Reed after the Maine election journeyed to New York to talk with John Davenport over the general outlook for the Republican party. A dispatch from that city thus records his movements:

"Tom Reed is here and has been in consultation with Johnny Davenport at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. Mr. Reed is credited with being disgusted with the attitude of Mr. Harrison toward the Force bill, and he has said several times since his arrival that what the party leaders need is the courage of their convictions, and that if an aggressive 'bloody shirt' campaign had been made in Maine the full Republican vote would have been brought out and the plurality of 1888 repeated. In this opinion Davenport agrees with Reed. Mr. Davenport is the author of the Force bill, and he has argued all through that the necessity of its passage should be made the chief feature of the Republican campaign."

Reed and Davenport are evidently "discouraged," and they want it distinctly understood that they will not hold themselves responsible for what occurs in November. Nevertheless we say to these distinguished statesmen that they will ever be held in grateful remembrance by the Democratic party for services rendered that organization during the Billion Dollar Congress. The wave of reaction which overturned the Republicans in 1890 has not spent its force.—Courier-Journal.

Rev. L. Morgan, a Republican candidate for the Tennessee Legislature, is disqualified by the State Constitution which provides that: "Whereas, Ministers of the gospel are by their professions dedicated to God and the care of souls, and ought not to be diverted from the great duty of their functions; therefore, no minister of the gospel, or priest of any denomination whatever, shall be eligible to a seat in either house of the Legislature."

At Evergreen, Ala., Wednesday night, J. F. Stallings, of Butler county was nominated for Congress on the 1001st ballot.

At Wednesday's session of the German-American Priests' Society at Newark, N. J., resolutions were prepared advocating the restoration of the temporal power of the Pope and the advancement of Catholicism among the German immigrants.
